Architectural Description: front façade; the church has a gable roof; constructed of yellow brick; a narrow pointed window with three panes and with a brick label is on either side of the main entrance; the front door is a double door with a pointed top and large ornate hinges; the door is surrounded by three brick arches and a decorative stone label; the tower at the right is three storeys high; supported by corner buttresses; the first storey has a pointed three paned window with a narrow brick label; the second storey window is tall and very narrow with a decorative stone label; the third storey consists of four small narrow pointed windows with two wider pointed windows above them and two larger pointed louvered windows with decoration in the peaks; the tower has a flat roof with four peaked towers with finials sitting on rectangular structures in each corner of the tower; above the door there are three pointed windows, with a rosette above them. This sits beneath a perpendicular, pointed oval louvre. There is an entrance door on the side wall at the right and five windows at the side of the church. They are two pointed three paned windows with a round window in the centre above the peaks; each has a stone label above the window. There is a buttress between each window; brick brackets sit under the eaves; five triangular windows with two round headed panes sit on the roof; each has a decorative iron finial on the roof. The rear of the church has one narrow pointed window with a brick label on the left side of the wall; above that and in the centre of the wall is a round rosette window. Two, one over one paned windows sit on either side of the round window higher in the wall and a narrow pointed louvered window is in the peak near the roof line.
