Architectural Description: Two storey, red brick house with segmental arched windows. This residence features a two-storey projecting front piece topped with iron cresting on the front façade. The house has generous eaves with ornate cornices and detailed brackets. First floor: entranceway with clear leaded sidelights and a clear leaded semielliptical transom; neo-classical gabled verandah (a later addition, likely added between 1905 and 1910) featuring pillars and cornice with dentils.

House was originally built for James Trow Jr, who worked as a broker, conveyer, and auctioneer, and who also served as a member of Stratford City Council. After his death, the son of James Trow Jr., Lt.-Col. Rolph Meredith Trow, lived in the house with his wife and family. The house stayed in the Trow family from its construction through to 1977.
